There are lots of straightforward, practical ways to give your time helping a friend or family member dealing with cancer. But sometimes, you want to do something unexpected—something that brings delight as well as a helping hand. Here are a few creative ideas to get you started:

Schedule a Coffee Date

Take them out for coffee or tea (and baked goods, of course!) and spend some time catching up in a relaxing environment. If they're not up for leaving the house, bring over the coffee and goodies instead.

Take a Ride

If your loved one is able to leave the house, take them out for a drive on a sunny day. No agenda. No map. Just a drive to enjoy the scenery—even if it's a short one. If you're someplace warm, don't forget to roll the windows down and turn the music up!

Have Fun with the Little Ones

For parents living with cancer, making their little ones happy is one of the most helpful things you can do. Offer to take the kids on an outing to the movies, a local park or the zoo. Feeling creative? Bring over a box of sidewalk chalk and encourage the kids to deck out the driveway and sidewalk with pictures and messages.

Tackle Their Chores

If you're handy, you might help with home and yard maintenance, or repair household items. You could also offer to wash the car, pitch in with laundry or do some outdoor planting when the season arrives.

These are just a few creative ideas you can use to help a loved one or friend with cancer. The LivingWith™ app is another helpful tool to generate more ideas, communicate with each other and schedule visits or outings. It makes getting help and helping out even easier.
